

The Justice System

Representing: China

Team Description: China established The Justice System to use the racing revenue to help out the mentally ill, and criminals physically and/or mentally tortured during imprisonment. The Justice System gained some minor racing successes, which was somewhat helpful to the team's targeted audience. Despite the mixed racing records, China is still quite adamant that The Justice System can still serve its purpose, especially if the team becomes better at racing; it's only a matter of time until The Justice System gains major success. An ex-warden named Tao Liang coaches Bruna Bao, Lauro Ivo, and Han Dei.

Coach: Tao Liang

Age: 51

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese

Hailing Country: China

Character Description

When Tao Liang worked as a warden, he saw many prisoners experience torture and other forms of violence—many who received these punishments did not deserve them. Tao attempted to stop some violent acts, but understood that his efforts were ultimately futile. He retired from his work, and started researching how to better the justice system; his research led him to acknowledge the injustices inside China's many psychiatric hospitals as well. Once China established The Justice System team and announced its purpose, Tao applied to be the coach and was successful in doing so. Tao had family members who were either racers or racing coaches that could help him, but his initial inexperience as a coach hurt the Justice System team. However, after more years of coaching and bonding with the team, the Justice System slowly gained some success.

Racer #412: Bruna Bao

Age: 32

Sex: Female

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese

Hailing Country: China

Character Description

Before joining The Justice System, Bruna Bao was originally a dirt racer. Although she enjoyed racing (a little too much even), she was never good enough to gain any financial benefits. Bruna did even realize that her dirt racing hobby soon left her on the streets. Homelessness was tough for Bruna, so much so that she eventually became desperate—desperate enough to commit a home invasion. However, her morals prevented her from actually stealing from the house and motivated her to turn herself in. Bruna did her time without any question, but was completely horrified at the prisoners' horrible treatment. Once she served her sentence and when China announced the Justice System team, Bruna immediately applied to be a racer and was barely accepted—thanks to her experience as a dirt racer. Bruna's main goal now is to fulfill her racing aspirations and fix prison corruption.

Racer #734: Lauro Ivo

Age: 28

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: White, European(German)

Hailing Country: Germany

Character Description

Lauro Ivo is a somewhat popular singles racer in his home country of Germany, and is skillful enough to gain recognition from some prominent German racing teams. Lauro was about to join a team in Germany, but his visit to China changed his mind. He thought that the announcement of The Justice System team was quite interesting, which was enough for him to do some light research. The information that surprised Lauro the most are the Chinese prisoners' unfair living conditions and the number of people with mental disorders who never received treatment. Because of the information he found, Lauro joined The Justice System racing team as a moral obligation.

Racer #524: Han Dei

Age: 27

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Vietnamese

Hailing Country: Vietnam

Character Description

Han Dei works as a psychiatric nurse, but his hobby is racing in local racing circuits. Although Han's work is quite difficult, he and his coworkers effectively tend to the patients. Once China announced the Justice System Racing team, Han took the opportunity to participate as a way to help his patients further and fulfill his hobby of racing. Han is a competitive, and even aggressive racer; after all, he is racing for a purpose, i.e., to provide more aid to his patients. However, Han is completely different outside of racing, for he is a calm and caring individual toward everyone he meets.
