

System Shock

Representing: Singapore

Team Description: System Shock started as just a robotics company. However, ever since racing became more popular, and even turned into a “religion” for some, the System Shock company changed into a legitimate racing team. System Shock utilized its robotics expertise by building its own cars from scratch. Such an approach was not initially successful, especially because the people who created the cars were also the racers. However, after gaining more experience and optimizing their cars, System Shock got some major wins. Fong Zheng coaches the following robotics experts/racers: Aaron Yun, Eric Chandra, and Dale Loo.

Coach: Fong Zheng

Age: 48

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese(Singaporean)

Hailing Country: Singapore

Character Description

Fong Zheng has a huge passion for robotics, and truly believes the world will need them for everyday life one day. He always attempts to prove his beliefs by utilizing his robotics expertise, and integrating it into the trendiest things. However, Fong’s attempts were never anything major until racing became more prominent. Fong and the System Shock members transformed the company into a racing team that creates their own cars from scratch. The racing team was initially a failure because the racers themselves were not experienced—at all. Fong was extremely angry and disappointed, but his perseverance did not allow him to quit. Luckily for him, System Shock soon turned into a successful team. Now, every time System Shock gets a major win, it builds up Fong’s ego and narcissism; he doesn’t even try to hide it.

Racer #314: Aaron Yun

Age: 41

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese(Singaporean)

Hailing Country: Singapore

Character Description

Out of everyone on his team, Aaron is the only one with actual racing experience. He started racing when he became a young adult and was a somewhat professional racer. When System Shock decided to change into a racing team, Aaron was the only one ecstatic about the news. He could finally combine his love for robotics as well as racing. When the rest of his team initially couldn't race professionally yet, Aaron did not become disheartened and was still motivated to continue. Out of everyone in System Shock, Aaron is the only one that visually shows his love and appreciation for racing, and even has a deep respect for the racers.

Racer #892: Eric Chandra

Age: 37

Sex: Female

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese(Singaporean)

Hailing Country: Singapore

Character Description

Unlike his teammates, Eric only wants to reap any financial benefits from robotics, and is not passionate about racing. If there was another avenue for robotics that was more profitable than racing, he would pursue it in a heartbeat. Eric was the only member of System Shock that gained no entertainment from bettering himself as a racer. He only found entertainment (kind of) in building the actual cars. Ironically though, Eric shares the same goal as many great and passionate racers, which is to be the best racer around; of course, he is only thinking about the financial benefits—not the fame and glory.

Racer #884: Dale Loo

Age: 35

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Chinese(Singaporean)

Hailing Country: China

Character Description

Dale is an expert in robotics but barely has any knowledge of racing. In fact, because of an early car accident, Dale became frightened at the sight of speeding vehicles. However, Dale's immense interest in robotics motivated him to stay with System Shock after it turned into a racing team. The early races and practice sessions were the hardest moments of his life, for his fears always lingered. Dale never mentioned his feelings to his teammates because he wanted to handle his fears on his lonesome. Moreover, Dale is an individual that always kept to himself, typically never showing many emotions—only mentally. Eventually, Dale became confident enough to gain some wins, but he must continue his racing career if he wants to fully stop his fears.
