

Infinity Track

Representing: Peru

Team Description: Infinity Track is a significant scholarship program in Peru that allows select students to race. If a racer does well enough, then they can continue being a part of the Infinity Track team. From the program's initial start-up, only the government managed it, and the teams never won any major racing competitions. However, once Carla María invested in the program and eventually became the team's coach, there was a more solid, sustainable baseline for scholarship money (which increased based on the team's successes); this also motivated more students to be better racers. Infinity Track's current team consists of Hana Ji, Min Ju-Won, and Jason Young.

Coach: Carla María

Age: 43

Sex: Female

Race/Ethnicity: Hispanic, Peruvian

Hailing Country: Peru

Character Description

Before becoming an ambitious, yet kind businesswoman, Carla María originally lived in an impoverished area of Peru. Despite her situation, Carla managed to find entertainment in watching local dirt races in her area. Watching the races motivated her to want to be a part of racing (in some form) one day. Carla worked hard and eventually became a knowledgeable businesswoman who soon funded many of Peru's charity programs; however, she was also saving enough money to start her own racing team. Once the Infinity Track program emerged, Carla saw it as an opportunity to not only help out people, some of whom share the same passion as her, but she can also fulfill her racing aspirations.

Racer #901: Hana Ji

Age: 26

Sex: Female

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Korean

Hailing Country: South Korea

Character Description

Min Ju-Won's family adopted Hana Ji—when she was a baby; this established a strong sisterhood between Hana and Min. Despite being close sisters, Hana's personality completely differs from Min's. Hana has no passion for racing and is simply in the program to finish her business degree plan faster. Hana and Min plan on finishing school, returning to South Korea, and managing their own K-Pop band (even handling the financial aspects). Hana Ji is ultimately an extremely opportunistic individual that will seek fame and fortune from the most trendiest things. She doesn't seem to have many passions, and it's questionable if she even likes K-Pop. Luckily for Hana and her ambitions, she is naturally good at both singing and racing, which can sometimes make her annoyingly arrogant.

Racer #910: Min Ju-Won

Age: 23

Sex: Female

Race/Ethnicity: Asian, Korean

Character Description

Min Ju-Won is a bubbly individual that looks up to her older sister, Hana Ji, so much so that she is willing to help with Hana's every plan and ambition. Min and her sister Hana are currently attending a business university, under the Infinity Track program. The main plan is to start up their own K-Pop band back home. However, unlike Hana, Min begins to have a passion for racing, which might even eclipse her passion for K-Pop. Ultimately, there will be a time when Min has to choose between her racing aspirations, or fulfilling the wishes of her sister Hana.

Racer #906: Jason Young

Age: 24

Sex: Male

Race/Ethnicity: Mixed, Peruvian

Character Description

Jason Young lives with a strict, middle-class family of farmers and fishermen. Jason's parents wanted him to become a successful lawyer, so Jason spent most of his life studying to be one. However, during his free time, Jason occasionally attends and watches his local racing circuits, which soon developed his passion for racing. When the Infinity Track emerged, Jason took the opportunity to be under the program in order to appease his parents' wishes while indulging in his racing aspirations. However, Jason understands that by the end of his university days, he must eventually choose between being a full-time lawyer, or a full-time racer.
